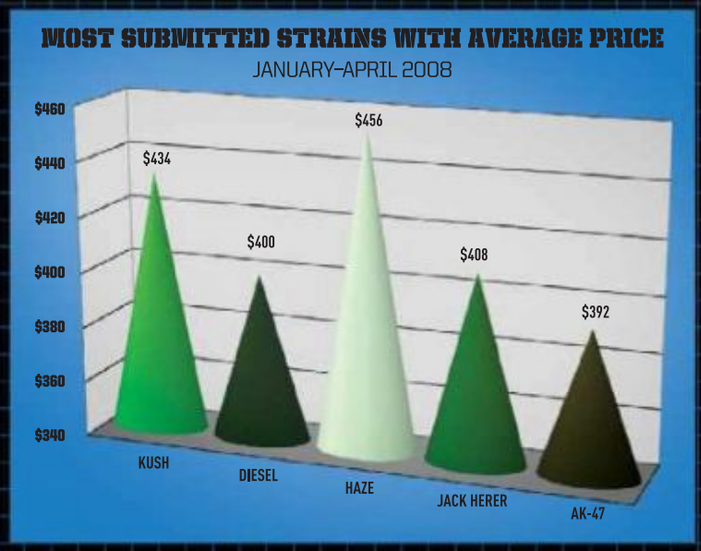
MARKET ANALYSIS

Kush once again topped the list to become April's most submitted strain. Diesel and Purps followed closely behind. While Kush and Diesel were heavily submitted, their average price dropped significantly from March. The top five submitted strains (with average price) were Kush ($372), Diesel ($355), Purps ($416), Haze ($424) and Strawberry Cough ($465).



SOUR DIESEL–$375
Anaheim, CALIFORNIA
"This Sour Diesel clone came from San Pedro, CA. Grown organically outdoors. This is the Soma version—an extremely potent sativa buzz that will put you down if consumed in excess."

PURPLE HAZE–$375
Lancaster, SOUTH CAROLINA
"This stuff is the first real Purple Haze I've seen around here in a while. Trimmed to perfection and cured well, the buds are all very large. The corner boys are selling this for $15 a half-gram. Good thing I know the man who holds the weight."

WHITE WIDOW–$200
Fort Wayne, INDIANA
"I was swinging by the city and found White Widow for $200 an ounce. Fort Wayne showed me some love."

BLUE DYNAMITE–$400
Athens, TENNESSEE
"This stuff is growing in the Tennessee Mountains, and it is the bluest bud ever. It is more purple than the Purps, and the smoke is wonderful."

PINEBERRY–C$200
Swan Hills, ALBERTA, CANADA
"Excellent outdoor '07 crop. The 'berry' part of the cross gives you a very pleasant aftertaste upon exhale. An excellent all-day smoke."

Got Algae & Fungus Gnats? You Need Cubecap™!

3" CUBECAP™ 7.8cm | 4" CUBECAP™ 10.15cm | 6" CUBECAP™ 15.25cm

- All natural, pesticide free
- Eliminates algae & fungus gnats
- Conserves water & nutrients
- Larger root mass is able to form
- Increased foliage & yields
- Lowers room humidity
- Re-usable & recyclable

CUBECAP™ caps naturally and effectively eliminate Algae, Fungus Gnats and their root eating Larva in Rockwool and Coco blocks.

CUBECAP™ Caps reflect light away from the block and up towards the foliage. This does two things: It stops photosynthesis and Algae from occurring and increases vegetative growth.

The CUBECAP™ is elevated and vented causing a micro climate to exist between the block and the cap, the perfect environment for new roots.

3" CUBECAP™ stacked on 6" 7.6cm / 15.25cm

4" CUBECAP™ stacked on 6" 10.15cm / 15.25cm

CUBE CAP

It is important to remember that the CUBECAP™ caps significantly slow the evaporation rate of water and nutrients. Lessening your watering schedule would be absolutely necessary!

ON NEWSSTANDS JULY 8TH!

NEAT FREAK

They say that cleanliness is next to godliness, and never does this cliché apply more than in your growroom. Pests, molds and bacteria hide in the mess you create, waiting to strike when you least expect it. Keeping your growroom spic and span will prevent many unforeseen problems. And the less clutter, the better: When you're an underground pot grower, you never know when you might have to cut and run.

STORY & PHOTOS BY DAVID STRANGE

Always clean dust off leaves to encourage healthy growth.

Discard used rockwool carefully after use.

Clean growrooms provide bigger yields with less headaches.

Never leave sensitive trash where others can find it and link it back to you.

Organization is essential to keeping things clean.

DANNY DANKO

"YOU'RE NOT GOING OUT TO PLAY UNTIL YOU'VE CLEANED YOUR ROOM!"

I'm sure most of us have heard this old motherly adage time and time again; with some it sunk in more than others. I'm going to admit that I hated cleaning my room—and yes, I've lived in some pretty ramshackle party pads, with dishes to the ceiling and more clothes than carpet on the floor. But I get it now. Sorry, Mom, but it wasn't your hollers from the kitchen (or the neat-freak ex) that made it seem really important. It was something completely different—a lesson learned from playing in the dirt, so to speak.

Now maybe it's just a coincidence that the most productive growrooms I've seen also seem to be the cleanest ones. Maybe the same bit of OCD that makes someone crave cleanliness also makes them do what needs to be done when it needs to be. But if you ask me, there's more to it than that. Having a well-kept working environment makes everything run so much more smoothly. And that's what taught me ... well, that you've gotta clean your room before you go out and play.

THE PRE-GAME SHOW

The first cleanup you're going to have to do—and this one is a must—is the pre-construction clean. When you're setting up a growroom, there are untold potential demons lurking in every corner, waiting to rear their ugly heads. Let's start from the floor up. Even if it's going to be covered with plastic, get rid of any carpeting if at all possible: This stuff is a magnet for potential mold and bugs and a big mess. Having carpet underneath your plastic will make it ridiculously easy to put holes into. When the water gets in there (pretty much inevitable), that shit is gonna rot something fierce. Now that's a cleanup you don't want to deal with.

The walls will likely be painted or covered in black and white poly. Either way, do yourself a favor and get a spray bottle with some bleach and water first. Give the whole room a spray-down to start nice and fresh. If the walls are to be painted white, it's a good idea to splurge on the slightly more expensive mold-resistant paints, like the ones used in bathrooms. Yes, it makes a difference.

Used growroom equipment (fans in particular) can be some of the best vehicles for stowaways to get into your room. All equipment should be given a once-over before being put into its new home. Some guys I know even clean new equipment, because so many growers go into the store coming from who-knows-where. I call this one mite-aphobia. Remember, if you're cleaning the dirty equipment in the new room, you're sort of defeating the purpose; clean it before it gets there. And if you had mite problems in the last room, never reuse the filters.

ORGANIZE

Now this word may seem like blasphemy to a lot of the smokers I know, but believe me, it will make your time in the room not only more productive but more pleasurable. Get yourself some shelves and drawers, because it's amazing how quickly gear and products can stack up. Keeping everything handy but organized will also give you more workspace, which disappears quickly when you're trying to max out a room.

It always helps to have a trusted friend to help hide the evidence.

HASH TRASH

After you've dealt with a successful crop and cleanup, I'm going to assume that you kept the shake separate for hash production. This is a whole new mess altogether. With a room full of splashing water, wet leaves and sticky resin, it's no wonder.

Before you start, give yourself a clean area to work in that can be wiped down after the job. If you're using bags in a bucket (or garbage pail), having a lid will drastically reduce any splashing or foamy overflow. Just cut a hole to put the beaters or drill through.

After the job is finished, anything that got wet also probably got sticky. Rubbing alcohol is your friend here: Wiping surfaces down with it will get rid of most residual resins. Do this right away, because leaving wet leaf or resin around will cause a stain. If you didn't get to it soon enough, bust out the bleach.

All bags and other equipment should also be washed and allowed to dry before being put away. Leaving wet leaf in a bag or storing it wet can cause it to get moldy and degrade the bag's material. Particularly after larger jobs, it's also handy to use that rubbing alcohol on the screens to keep them from clogging. Simply soak them for a few minutes and then rinse with cold water.

Freeze, compost or dispose of wet leaf mush immediately to avoid horrendous odors.

After only about 48 hours, wet shake can start smelling somewhat like a dead goat that's been baking in the sun for three days. Serious nastiness! To prevent the stench and keep the shake from dripping all over while it's being disposed of, throw the processed material in the freezer until it can be trashed.

BETWEEN CROP MAINTENANCE

So the crop just came down and it's time to gear up for the next round. This is usually about as messy as a growroom is gonna get. It can be quite the discouraging start to your day, looking at a heap of sticks and roots, piles of dirt or gunky reservoirs … and what to do with that rockwool? Well, the first step is that damn "organize" word again. Certain kinds of trash can be dumped in a helluva lot more places than others. Stems and roots should be removed from soil before bagging it, because those things have a habit of poking holes in bags, thereby exposing the whole shebang. Soil can also be dumped more places than those sticks. For rockwool cubes, a mop bucket works well for squeezing out the water to compress and lighten them up. If there's time and space, letting them dry (post-squish) will save your back some abuse.

Once the garbage has been separated and bagged, it's time to do the dump. Though many garbage bags come with odor suppressors, they're not as tough as construction-site debris bags, burlap and nylon grain sacks, or something else of that nature, which are far less likely to bust open from a stick wound. There's nothing quite like trying to throw a bag of conspicuous trash into a dumpster and having it burst all over your head. Come to think of it, dumpsters aren't necessarily the smartest places to use for disposal anyway. If you're going to use one, try throwing a bag of returnable bottles in there first. If they're gone when you look again, that dumpster probably gets checked a lot, and your trash could easily be exposed. People in uppity neighborhoods don't look in the trash nearly as often—go figure. The most important point to remember here, though, is don't be seen dumping it. Keep that in mind and you should be okay.

With all the trash out of the way, it's time to clean the gear and the room itself. This is also the best time to make any tweaks to the setup before the next crop. Again, that pre-game spray-down is never a bad idea. Don't forget to clean the empty pots, too. If the grow was hydro, the tables and reservoir should be scrubbed and disinfected. For tables and the rest, a dish brush, maybe a toothbrush to get into the cracks and some bleach (rubbing alcohol or hydrogen peroxide are cheap alternatives) are about all you need. Completely drain the water before cleaning, and make sure you've properly rinsed away any cleaning agents before refilling the reservoir. This can actually take a lot more rinsing than you think, so be thorough. The main mission is to get rid of any algae, but don't forget those salt deposits around the rims, too. Expanded clay pellets can be cleaned of debris, soaked in the same solution and reused. Air stones are cheap and probably clogged, so just replace those instead of wasting your time. As for the ventilation, a clean fan is a quiet fan: Giving it a once-over keeps it in better running order, as build-up can cause heavier wear on the motor.

THE LAST GOODBYE

When shutting down a growroom, the final cleanup can be your most important. This is the one that's supposed to make it look like it never existed in the first place. The biggest giveaways here have got to be the wiring and holes in the walls. It's sort of a no-brainer to remove all the equipment and signs of plants, but any unusual wiring or plumbing (basically, anything you added) should be removed and/or returned to its original state as well. The holes should be patched—properly, so get the plaster and do it right—but the patches won't match the existing wall, so repainting the room to cover them up should definitely be considered. There's not much point taking all the steps to keep a grow stealthy and skipping this last one.

Hopefully, Mom's message has sunk in this time and you'll all become a bunch of regular Mary Jane maids. It's just a shame that most of you can't show her how clean your rooms are now.

A PRESSING MATTER

Forget about scraping your fingers and trim tools for hash. Forget about sprinkling kif over bowls or into joints. Now there's a quick and easy way to make your own hash by pressing your kif with the Neato Press.

The Neato Press from West Coast Growers is a hand-held press perfect for making pressed kif hash. A disc press is screwed down by hand into a steel barrel, creating a nice-looking piece of hash that can even have words like "Ganja" pressed into the side. By applying extra pressure to standard hand-rolled balls of kif, the Neato Press gives added structure and solidarity to your hash while also crushing open resin glands for a full-flavor taste.

HYBRID PARAPHERNALIA?

Yes, we said it: hybrid paraphernalia, not hybrid bud strains. Luckily, though, in this case it's just as good. It's the Phedor from wickedroots.com. A cross between a vaporizer and a butane-less lighter, the Phedor is a flameless solution for smoking herb that's healthier and tastier than the usual methods.

Utilizing a fully embedded ceramic heating rod, the Phedor eliminates all butane and lighter fuels to give smokers the pure taste of their buds without the awful gas. Advanced Sapphire Technology prevents wearing-down of the heating rod, which also has a non-stick surface.

By holding the red-hot rod just over bud or hash, smokers can vaporize the herb without actually burning plant material, much like a vaporizing machine does—only the Phedor works with glass bowls and bongs! Hits from water pipes taste amazing and are healthier for you, and if you're a bubble-hash fan, there's nothing better.

Editor's warning: The Phedor reaches extremely hot temperatures and will severely burn skin and other surfaces. Be sure never to set the Phedor down without first unplugging it!

Sometimes the simplest inventions instantly become a hit. Such is the case with Glass Grippers, the newest way to keep your precious glass smoking pieces from breaking. Glass Grippers fasten onto the bottom of your bong and protect it from slipping around on floors or chipping on tabletops.

Attaching these cheap, water-resistant stick-on pads to your glassware will save you hundreds of dollars in broken accessories over the long run, and those expensive heady pieces will remain as keepsakes and heirlooms to pass down to the kids or grandkids once they're grown and ready to see the real family jewels.

LIGHT-DEPRIVATION STATION

Using a tarp to cover your plants every 12 hours will induce flowering during the middle of spring or summer—a great way to finish a sweet crop before choppers or rippers are even thinking about looking for it.

The Connoisseur Cropper is a smaller take on the amazing Auto-Flowerer, a compact version of this ingenious growing tool specially designed for the backyard gardener. At only 6 feet by 4 feet (and a mere 3.5 feet high), this unit can fit into almost anybody's yard or deck. It also comes equipped with Polyshield to prevent detection by infrared cameras and Odorsok carbon filtration to avoid any problems with odor. A Vortex fan blows air through quietly and efficiently, and a winch provides torque to open and close the outer shield so plants can finish flowering fast.

ALL YOU NEED TO GROW

ANSWERS & PHOTOS BY JORGE CERVANTES

COMPASSIONATE GROWER

I run a grow operation for a compassion clinic. Recently, I planted six germinated seeds and threw them in the dark, but they did not come up. Then I put them under two small desk-lamp fluorescents. It is Day 4 and no seeds have come up yet. Is there a problem with my setup? I've been using 24 hours of light a day, and the garden is bordered with Mylar. It gets pretty hot in there. The lights are providing warmth and lumens. Also, I found a small worm about a millimeter long and removed it.

T.
Via Internet

Dear T.,
Germinated seeds are very delicate and should be "placed" in the dark rather than "thrown." Your choice of language indicates rough handling of the germinated seed. You also say that it "gets pretty hot," but you don't say how hot. The ideal atmospheric temperature range for germinating seed is 78°F to 80°F. Keep the soil a few degrees warmer to speed root development—but if it gets much hotter, growth is impaired. Most importantly, a hot environment will dry out the soil and the new tender roots. The roots must remain moist at all times; if they dry out, growth will be stunted. As the moisture dissipates, the severity of the problem progresses, growth stops altogether and finally death occurs. Keep the surface of the soil or growing medium evenly moist until the germinated seed has broken through the soil surface and grown for a week. The first two weeks of growth are the most critical, because seedlings have a small, delicate, developing root system and must receive proper moisture.

If the worm you removed ate any part of the seeds, you will find evidence in the form of physical damage to the germinated seed. If the seed is affected or dead, you must replant. This time, use store-bought soil that is guaranteed to be "sterile" and you should have no problems with little worms.

LADYBIRD BEETLES

Is it true that you can put ladybugs in your growroom and they will keep spider mites and other pests away?

T.S.T.
Via Internet

Dear T.S.T.,
No. In the United States, most ladybird beetles (ladybugs) are collected in California in the Sierra Mountains. The ladybugs are hibernating and full of fat (stored food) when they're collected, and they are refrigerated to keep them in a state of low metabolism. When they're released, the ladybugs warm up and start looking for a mate; food is the last thing on their mind at this time. Once they mate and lay eggs, young larvae hatch out. The larvae that cannot fly have a ravenous appetite, and their favorite food is aphids. Seldom do they eat spider mites.

If you introduce 100 ladybugs into your growroom on Monday, there will be only a few left by Friday. Most of them will be ready to look for a mate and will take off toward the "sun"– which is actually a high-intensity discharge (HID) light. They'll fly straight into the hot lamp and pop like popcorn!

ROOTS

If you plant in a short, deep, wide and long container (4" x 18" x 8"), will the roots grow healthy? I know if you plant in a 5-gallon pot, the roots grow down, but in this case would they make their way across the container?

J.R.
Via Internet

Dear J.R.,
Four inches is not very deep. This shallow pot could hold only 3 to 3.5 inches of soil. Cannabis generally throws deep anchoring roots that also bring minerals up from the soil to the plant. These roots generally circle the bottom and sides of the container. Small feeder roots are located near the growing tip of such roots. Other roots filled with fine feeder roots also grow from the subterranean stem. The problem you will have with such a short pot is that it will fill with roots quickly. And since the container is so shallow, it will dry out quickly, which will make keeping it moist a constant problem. You will have to use an automatic watering system or water by hand once or twice a day to ensure that your plants receive adequate water. You could also put a tray under the container, then water the container and let the excess drain into the tray. The plant should use all the water in the tray in a day or so. However, don't let the water stand in the tray for more than one and a half to two days or you'll create the ideal conditions for root rot.

HOT GROW

I have a grow space that is 6 by 7 feet, and I use a 400-watt, 600-watt and 1,000-watt high-pressure sodium (HPS) light for flowering. The 600-watt was added recently, and I've been experiencing yellowing and a drop-off of fan leaves ever since. Could this be caused by too much light in my grow space? What would be the best spacing for the reflectors?

Matt
Via Internet

Dear Matt,

You added light and heat when you added the 600-watt lamp. Natural sunlight provides much more light than most plants need to grow, and plants like cannabis grow well under very intense sunlight. You have 2,000 watts of HID light in a 420-square-foot room. That doesn't appear to be too much light. But did you add more ventilation or increase the air circulation to allow for the added heat from the 600-watt lamp? The lamp and the ballast both radiate heat: Did you put the ballast outside the growroom?

You should always remember that heat comes along with light. When the light shines on the surface of a leaf, the temperature inside the leaf is about 10°F higher than the exterior surface. Such extra heat taxes the plant's cooling system; hot leaves require more moisture so they can stay cool. Plants draw in more irrigation water and dissipate it through their leaves when they transpire. When plants are too hot and can't stay cool enough via transpiration, they generally start losing their lower leaves. You can see the same thing outdoors during dry years: Trees start shedding their lower leaves.

Buy an inexpensive light meter and measure the light in your room just above plants. Hang the lamps so that you distribute the light as evenly as possible.

SMALL GROW

I've been using the hightimes.com site as a great guide to grow by. I'm a first-time grower who is looking to get just five females to grow in a situation where humidity, temperature and light are not a problem. What can I do to get maximum growth and potency outdoors?

Cory
Via Internet

Dear Cory,

The kind of garden you set up really depends upon your time, budget, security needs and genetics. If you have a spare closet with good ventilation, you could grow there. Or you could invest in one of the many prefabricated "grow closets" available these days. Growing in such a pre-made closet is a good idea because the space is all set up and you can concentrate on growing rather than dinking around with mechanical or construction stuff. Small soil or hydroponic gardens require about the same amount of maintenance, but the hydroponic garden will also require an electrical outlet. Both gardens need a drain or receptacle to catch drain water. Use a tried and true high-quality fertilizer such as General Hydroponics, Canna, Bio Biz, etc. Once you start with a fertilizer, continue with it; don't change from one to the other. Plants take a few weeks to show signs of over- or under-fertilization, so changing fertilizers only compounds and confuses the problem. Security is a matter of containing the garden so that no trace of it is evident to outsiders. But the biggest security breach is usually loose lips: Don't tell anybody about your secret grow operation!

Preferably, you should germinate and grow five feminized seeds. The second preference is to grow five female clones. And the last preference is to grow cannabis seeds and cull out the male plants when they begin to show their sex. Be sure to choose plants that are easy to grow, such as Nebula, Big Bud, Chronic, Power Plant, etc.

NO FLOWERS!

I have a female plant that won't flower, nor has it shown any signs of trying to form buds. I've had the plant on a 12/12-hour day/night light schedule for over a month and there's still no sign of flowering, even though the plant has gotten taller and bushier. It was 1.5 feet before; now it's 3.5 feet tall! I have tried everything I can think of to get it to flower, with no success. I've been using a bloom fertilizer and a 15-30-15 liquid mix. What am I doing wrong?

D&L69420
Via Internet

Dear D&L69420,
You've planted a tropical sativa strain. The seed probably came from a bag of great Colombian or Mexican, or from some other tropical region. These strains have grown and developed in tropical climates, where they receive something like a 12/12-hour day/night light schedule. Such plants are predisposed to flower after going through the vegetative-growth stage. In their natural environment, they tend to flower for three months or longer. These plants also tend to grow much taller, with more space between the branch internodes; your plant grew 2 feet (24 inches) in 30 days. You must wait until the plant is ready to flower, and flowering will take three months or longer. Also, the buds will not be compact, and the harvest weight and volume will be low.

In the future, you'll be better off planting either feminized seed or clones from known females that produce well.

EYES IN THE SKY

I love your videos and books. I am still a greenhorn when it comes to growing, but I grew outdoors this year and had a great crop! Anyway, what I was wondering is this: When the cops go looking from the air for your grow, what are they looking at? I mean, I've had some people tell me that they use heat guns to find pot, and others tell me that they find it by the plants' color. When I had a small patch of six sativas, the National Guard flew over on maneuvers a couple times and I never had a problem. Can they see only big patches out in nowhere, or can they spot them down to a single plant? I am planning on doing some guerrilla gardening and need any advice you can give me to protect my valued weed!

Chronicdog
Via Internet

Keep a single male plant in an enclosed room and use him for breeding. Bring your flowering females into the room for pollination.

Dear Chronicdog,
Grow a crop in the spring/early summer before anybody starts looking for it. Set 12- to 18-inch clones or seedlings outdoors under a heated greenhouse as soon as possible. Make sure the temperature stays above 65°F at night and up to 75°F during the day; vent off the hot air if the sun heats the greenhouse too much. Harden off the little plants by turning off the heat in the greenhouse and then transplant to bigger pots or plant outdoors, if possible. They will be ready to smoke in eight to 10 weeks!

The U.S. Supreme Court, in United States v. Kyllo (2001), declared that law-enforcement organizations (LEO) must secure a search warrant before they can use sophisticated snoop technology like infrared or thermal-imaging cameras to locate "suspicious" concentrations of heat in private places. This means that any evidence gathered using such technology without a search warrant cannot be introduced in a court of law. But what is to stop LEO from using this technology to build their cases on the sly?

I am sure that some law-enforcement agencies in the US are using high-tech heat-sensing systems to locate large marijuana plantations; they are also using low-tech human resources like fly-by spotters. The problem remains that marijuana needs lots of sunlight to grow big, strong buds, so when the plants are out in the open in an incongruous setting, they stick out like a beacon to LEO (and everybody else), whether the surveillance they're using is high-tech or not.

There are many, many things you can do to plant and harvest another good crop. LEO is generally a problem if you plant big gardens in the open or where they can be easily spotted from the air. Do not plant big gardens, but rather small patches of one to three plants. Plant in well-thought-out places—site selection is the most important part of guerrilla growing. Choose a site where it will be easy to make your plants blend into the surroundings so there is virtually no trace of a grow show. Hide the marijuana among other native plants that are of similar size and foliage. Use local plants like stinging nettles, sticker bushes, poison oak, poison ivy, etc., as camouflage, but be careful—these natural allies live up to their names! Camouflage your plants by bending and pruning. Bending the branches is the least traumatic option and has less effect on your plants' hormones, liquid flow and physical shape. Pruning the main stems makes plants less obvious but doesn't improve the harvest.

Think up a believable story to explain why you're hiking in the area—bird watching, fishing, wildflower photography, etc.—and always have evidence (fishing pole, camera, poetry notebook) to support your story. Visit your guerrilla patch when there is little other traffic, usually in the early morning or early evening. Be sure to turn off your cell-phone ringer! And don't make a distinguishable path to the patch; take a different route every time you visit. Likewise, if you drive to the patch, park your vehicle in a discreet place.

BREEDING MALE

I have a small garden (2 by 2 feet) under a 250-watt high-pressure sodium (HPS) lamp. Can I keep one male under some fluorescent light? If so, can I bring in some females from my flowering room and let them be pollinated before returning them to the flowering room? I have very little space to breed, but I have quality genetics and would like to make seeds for future projects. Any help you can give me will be greatly appreciated.

Organic Ed
Via Internet

Dear Organic Ed,
A fluorescent lamp should be able to keep a flowering male that produces viable pollen alive for several weeks. Yes, you can bring in selected females to be pollinated by the male in the remote room—but the biggest problem usually encountered when you have a male plant around is that the pollen it produces drifts throughout the house. My old friend Shantibaba used to keep males and breeding females in nylon hanging closets similar to the grow closets popular today. He would mist the outside of the grow closet to render any escaping pollen unviable. I mention this so you'll be sure to use a mist of water in the room to help contain pollen.

GARDEN CALENDAR

This beginner's garden is under a single 400-watt HPS lamp. He could have doubled the number of plants if he'd started flowering when they were 8 to12 inches tall.

APRIL 2008

OUTDOORS

Freezing nighttime temperatures give way to good growing weather in much of America. This is the month that milder coastal and southern climates receive enough sunlight to warm the ground and allow marijuana to grow. Warm-season growers can move seedlings and clones outdoors now if they're protected under a small plastic greenhouse.

Buy seeds and sort out your leftover seeds from previous years. Choose the ones that you want to plant. Strong, dark, well-formed seeds will be the most viable. Place unused seeds in a dark, airtight container and store in a cool, dark place. Do not overlook seed sellers in Holland, Spain and the UK. These days, Canadian seed sellers prefer to sell seeds only within Canada.

Start working the soil in new and seasoned grow sites. Scout out new guerrilla patches. Bring a small, lightweight tool to dig and sample the soil and clear weeds from new grow sites. Add peat moss or coco peat to cold, wet soil to lighten it and make it easy to work. Compressed bricks of coco peat are easy to transport and expand to nine times their size when moistened. Mixing a bit of peat to native wet soil makes it possible to cultivate and plant a couple of months earlier.

Remember that any new grow sites should have good soil, a source of water and should receive at least five hours of strong midday sun to grow good buds.

Start seedlings and clones now to move into your outdoor garden for the long summer growing season. When clones and seedlings are 6 to 12 inches tall, they're ready to move outdoors. Remember to harden off tender indoor plants before moving them outdoors—it's a big shock to come from a protected indoor environment to a harsh outdoor climate. Once they're hardened off, your plants are ready to transplant.

If you planted a spring crop last month or before, you will be harvesting it now through next month! Enjoy!

INDOORS

Air out growrooms! Let the spring weather fill your garden! April is a wonderful month for spring cleaning. Get rid of any bothersome garbage, and clean all your garden gear with soap and water. Organize your grow area so that you get the best use of the space. Clean, clean, clean!

Central heating and space heaters are probably turned off now. Their absence will affect the humidity in your house and growroom, too. This can sneak up and cause plant problems. Be sure to keep the humidity around 50% in the flowering room and about 60% in the vegetative room.

Spring weather also brings in a host of pests and diseases. Check leaf undersides, where pests usually live. Use a 10x to 30x loupe to positively identify pests. Spider mites, whiteflies and thrips are much easier to spot with a loupe. My favorite pyrethrum product to eradicate these pests is Whidmire's Exclude. Apply it three times at five-day intervals if many pests are visible.

Do not work in your outdoor garden and then come directly into your indoor garden! You must change your clothes and shoes and wash your hands, since they will all be packed with microscopic pests and their eggs. Don't be a vector!

Drain and scrub reservoirs and fill with fresh nutrient solution. Track water/nutrient usage during the next 30 days and compare with use last month. April is the most common month for indoor gardens to feel the effects of the spring weather outdoors. This climate change also affects nutrient and water use.

Appropriate pH and EC (ppm) in nutrient solutions and fertilizer mixes will help ensure that all nutrients will be available in the growing medium. Always keep both pH and EC within a safe range for the fertilizers and products you're using. Follow the manufacturer's dilution and dosage guidelines. Don't change fertilizers several times during a crop. Track the results with a specific fertilizer and use the data as a base for future experiments.

Flush soil and hydroponic growing mediums every month. Leach containers with three times the volume of a mild nutrient solution to the quantity of substrate. It's a little bit of work, but flushing the substrate will wash away toxic nutrient buildup and help maintain a healthy root environment, which will avert many future problems.

More neighbors, pedestrians and passersby are out on the street when the weather is nice. They also pay more attention to little things in the neighborhood. Stroll around the outside of your growroom or house and take a sensory inventory: If you can hear, smell, see or touch anything outside the growroom that betrays its existence, fix it. Listen for noise from fans, the purr of ballasts, clicking switches, etc. Look for light leaks at night. Smell for any sign of cannabis odor.

Take clones two to three weeks before harvest. Germinate seeds about two months before harvest so they're ready to move into the flowering room.

Harvest!

Clean room thoroughly and move in the next crop of clones.

NEXT MONTH IN HIGH TIMES

Everyone makes a grab for West Coast weed.

DAN SKYE

CALIFORNIA RULES!

This month, HIGH TIMES salutes the Mecca of marijuana—California! It's a land of pot pioneers with a booming bud economy. The Golden State breeds the best cannabis on the planet, blazes the trail for the medical-marijuana movement, and demonstrates to the world what marijuana consciousness is all about.

HIGH ON THE RANGE

The veteran medical growers of California are sprouting seeds from last century, cultivating a time capsule of classic cannabis. Join Murphy Green for a garden tour in rural NoCal as she reports on these delectable heirloom strains.

PUSHING THE ENVELOPE

Cultivation Reporter Nico Escondido reveals the man behind Apothecary Seeds, winner of the 2007 Cannabis Cup for Best Sativa.

SPIRIT OF CALI

A rollicking report from the second Santa Cruz Cup where five outstanding local strains competed for a top prize. Astoundingly, the event took place right downtown—no secrecy required! Senior Editor Dan Skye tries to get a handle on what makes California great.

NIC'S PICKS

Part 2 of our 2007 Cannabis Cup Strain Report, this month's picks are brought to us by Nico Escondido of the Cup winners Kaia Kush and Top Dawg, not to mention Tasman Haze, Crimea Blue, Alegria and Island Sweet Skunk.

PLUS: Court cases to watch in Cali, Nick Drake and Elephant Man.

ON SALE MARCH 18TH. DON'T MISS IT!
