The seed revolution has begun!
An historic day has arrived as a new development in seed sales is announced to the public.

A GREEN HOUSE IN

After a teaser campaign appearing in all the cannabis magazines and on cannabis websites whetted everyone's appetite, it's time to reveal what it was all about.

The Green House Seed Company is introducing to the market a new, revolutionary technique that allows multiple strains to be sold in a single pack. Green House seeds are now produced in a new, color-coated version.

The color coating has been used in the last few years to improve the visibility of seeds in order to facilitate planting (especially in Third World countries), as well as to increase the germination ratio by adding hormones and root stimulators into the coating itself. Another advantage of the coating is the fact that root and plant diseases can now be prevented with the addition of anti-pathogens. Holland is the world leader in this sector, producing most of the equipment and additives used to color-coat seeds worldwide.

The new Green House Seed Company Research & Development Centre is equipped with special machinery to select, coat and color the seeds. The laboratory facilities have been built with many criteria in mind: to employ the latest in innovative equipment and cutting-edge techniques, and to allow strict quality control of the product.

The seeds are first coated with a secret mix developed by the Green House Seed Company during the course of years of research in cooperation with international laboratories. The coating contains root stimulators and anti-pathogens—ideal for helping the seeds during the very first days and weeks of life.

After the coating comes the color: Seeds are painted using special non-toxic water-based colors made with organic components that are completely safe for the environment and its creatures. The freshly colored seeds are then dried in a special dryer and tested before packaging.

The seeds are checked for uniformity and germination before and after the color-coating process to ensure the highest standards, and to guarantee that our demanding customers will be delighted with our strains.

In addition to the traditional packs, there are now 22 new varieties of mixed-color packs available (10 with five seeds per pack, and 12 with 10 seeds per pack). The combinations range from different indica/sativa mixes to the greatly anticipated all-sativa and all-indica combinations. The colors are shiny, intense and very eye-catching, ranging from metallic yellow (AMS) to gold (Lemon Skunk), from metallic red (Big Bang) to purple (Hawaiian Snow), and from black (White Rhino) to white (White Widow).

So from this point on, growers will have the chance to buy three strains in a single pack, and they will never be in doubt about the identity of a seed.

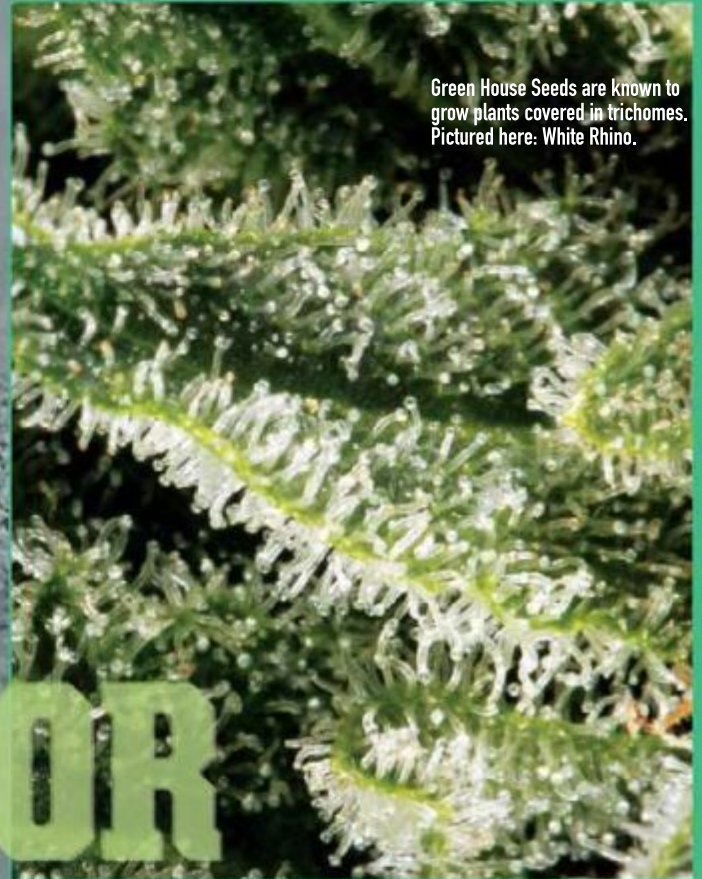

The revolution has begun, and it comes in every color of the rainbow. Enjoy this new era of convenience and choice, and give us your feedback at greenhouseseeds.nl.—Arjan, Franco and the entire Green House Seed Company team

GROW HUT

Growers are always looking for cheap and simple solutions to their problems and the Grow Room Tent solves many. It's a light-tight grow tent that zips open and closed on three sides for easy access. Grow Room Tents can be assembled by one person in a half-hour and come down even quicker in case they need moving or hiding. A waterproof floor liner keeps it from flooding and holes for intake or exhaust are built right in. It's both an instant growroom and a portable one, and it can take up to 600-watts of light and the hydro or soilless mix system of your choice. Dimensions are 53" by 53" by 84" tall to provide space for plants to grow and buds to fill out the canopy.

MAKE A BEE LINE

Quality cannabis should never be consumed with butane and flint from lighters and sulfur from matches. The complex flavors become lost and those products are harmful to health and the environment. That's why we're so excited about Bee Line, a new organic product made from hemp and beeswax and hand wrapped around recycled paper. Simply light the string and it stays lit like a candle for fresh tasting hit after hit. The slow burn is perfect for keeping bowls well lit without the toxins and pollution of chemicals and you'll quickly come to enjoy the subtle hints of honey with your bubblehash. Bee Line stays lit and so do you.

CRUZ CONTROL

Since 1973, skateboard company Santa Cruz has created iconic skate decks and gear for action sports enthusiasts. Their new line features some cool pot-infused clothing and we couldn't help but notice that they've filled in their famous logo with buds. We applaud the folks at Santa Cruz for acknowledging the obvious connection between cannabis and surf/skate/snow cultures and not buying into the fear instilled by drug warriors. These shirts reveal what we've always known; smoking pot and riding boards go hand in hand.

GARDEN ARMOR

Hydroponic gardeners know that cleanliness is one of the most important factors in keeping their plants healthy and their buds bursting, but trays and reservoirs always tend to build up all kinds of hard-to-clean gunk. Garden Ablaze has come up with the perfect simple solution; their HydroGarden Armor is essentially a simple liner that protects trays and reservoirs and lets plants and roots continue to do their thing without affecting pH or pumps. Molds, funguses and pests are kept at bay when there's no home for them to multiply. So, if you're tired of constantly scrubbing out trays and cleaning out your reservoirs, put on some Armor and you'll always be protected.

MORE ON L.E.D.S

I read the chapter in Marijuana Horticulture on "Lights and Electricity," and there's no mention of LED grow lights. Do you have any experience with these devices? What are your thoughts?

D-Bo

Via Internet

Dear D-Bo,

Although I answered a similar question last month, LED (light-emitting diode) lamps are such a cool subject that they demand additional information and a more complete answer this month.

LEDs are the wave of the future: You can grow clones, seedlings, vegetative and flowering plants with them. Although the plants in the gardens I saw using LED lamps did not yield tight, compact, heavy-duty buds, they did produce a respectable yield. And for the amount of money spent per watt of useable light, LEDs are by far the most efficient lights I've seen. They use solid-state components to produce illumination rather than filaments, as you find in incandescent and tungsten halogen bulbs, or the gas that is used in high-intensity discharge (HID), fluorescent and compact fluorescent (CF) bulbs. LED lamps consume a fraction of the electricity of HID and fluorescent/CF lamps and generate very little heat. LED fixtures are rated for regular household current: 120 and 230 volts.

But all LEDs are not created equal. LED output continues to increase with improved materials and technology while still maintaining the efficiency and reliability associated with the solid-state components. Therefore, do not be fooled by old LED lamps that are not as bright as newer models. Never purchase LED lamps with a rating lower than 1 (one) watt per bulb. Keep in mind that LED lamps are rated in milliwatts (mW) and consume much less electricity than fluorescent, CF and HID lamps to generate much more light. Currently, the most common LEDs used for plant growth consume 1 watt per bulb. Typically, clusters of 80 to 100 bulbs (consuming 80 to 100 watts, respectively) are placed in a single fixture. The color spectrum of each bulb is dictated by the semi-conducting material's composition and condition. The spectrum can range from infrared to ultraviolet and many colors in between. This allows the new LED grow lamps to combine blue and red bulbs to form the exact spectrum necessary for cannabis growth.

Directional LEDs ensure that all of the light produced is pointed downward so that no illumination is lost on the sides. The LEDs from Philips Lumileds Lighting Co. produce 115 lumens per watt. The exact spectrum produced is so efficient for growing plants that previous rules about lumens-per-watt do not apply. For example, an 85- to 90-watt LED fixture with the proper spectrum will illuminate a 3-by-3-foot growroom. Also, LED fixtures have an 100% efficient life expectancy of 30,000 hours—about six years when operated 12 hours a day, and three years when operated 24 hours a day. Beyond 30,000 hours, the brilliance fades by approximately 30% during the following 20,000 hours.

Similar to the ballast found in more conventional lighting systems, the power supply that drives LEDs precisely regulates the flow of electricity in milliwatts to the lamps. The solid-state, low-wattage device generates very little heat because the flow is not impeded, and several fixtures available today include a fan (or fans) to dissipate heat quickly and efficiently.

SOIL, WATER AND COCO

What nutrients do you use in 3-gallon indoor pots of soil? What schedule do you use indoors for the vegetative and flowering stages with soil? What do you think about coconut-fiber cubes in hydroponic systems?

Manny

Via Internet

Dear Manny,

There are many nutrients (fertilizers) that work well in soil. The main thing to remember is to start with good soil and good water. I prefer high-quality fertilizers that contain a complete array of nutrients. Brand names that I can recommend without hesitation are Canna, Genesis and General Hydroponics. There are quite a few more excellent high-quality fertilizers, but the ones above I can personally vouch for. The main thing to remember is to follow the manufacturer's use and dosage instructions.

Check your water to ensure that it's not full of excess dissolved salts. "Hard" water has a high concentration of calcium and magnesium. If your water has more than 150 milligrams of calcium per liter, you may want to run it through a reverse-osmosis (RO) filter to remove these excess salts. Concentrations of more than 50 ppm of sodium will also tie up nutrients, and total concentrations of more than 300 ppm of dissolved solids (i.e., salts) will greatly alter your fertilizer's effectiveness. Therefore, you should also use an RO filter to remove them.

I like to buy high-quality premixed soil that drains well. Most of these soils have at least 10% perlite added to facilitate drainage. Look for soil with a stable pH of around 6 to 6.5. Don't use soil that is too acidic or that contains too much clay or bark. Ask the folks at your local nursery for recommendations. Actually, one of my favorite mixes to use isn't soil, but a soilless mix such as Pro-Mix. This stuff is great! It's enriched with Bacillus subtilis MBI 600, a bio-fungicide in the Bt (Bacillus thuringiensis) family that prevents root diseases. The mix consists of about 75% Canadian sphagnum peat moss and both dolomite and calcitic limestone to keep pH stable, plus micronutrients, perlite, vermiculite and a wetting agent. I like it because it's easy to handle and grow in.

Coco peat is great stuff, too— just make sure to purchase a high-quality brand such as Canna. Other brands may not have all the salts washed out or could contain many impurities. Check out their website, canna.com, for more information about coco peat.

MARY JANE ON MYSPACE

I'm 19 years old and live in New Jersey. I am majoring in botany at college. I love cannabis—not just smoking and growing and cooking with it, but also studying its effects as a medicine. I love everything about this intriguing plant. I hope one day to legally grow it and to follow my dreams of marijuana activism, and I owe it all to you, man. I've read your books on growing and seen your videos. My friends and I have started a MySpace page dedicated to marijuana and the anti-prohibition movement and the hippie culture of the '60s and '70s. I'd love it if you could stop in sometime and check it out: myspace.com/themovement00.

BgNick (onelove)
Via Internet

Dear BgNick,
I just did! You have a good-looking site. Also, I'm pleased to report that I have seen many other sites dedicated to marijuana out there. I urge all HIGH TIMES readers to check out the social-networking opportunities available on MySpace, Facebook, etc., to make more marijuana friends!

THE PLANT!

I'm in Arizona and have started growing with your books as my guides. I've been somewhat successful so far, even though it's illegal here. I am 20 right now, and the law is a bit harsh on adults. I was wondering how to get into seed companies and dispensaries in any country as a grower. Do I need to go to school for botany, or is there a marijuana college? This may sound stupid to some, but I have fallen completely in love with the plant and can see myself doing this forever. Thank you for your time and any information you may have to share.

Pedro Cruz
Via Internet

Dear Pedro,
The cannabis-growing industry is not regulated and is for the most part illegal. That means you don't need a special degree to enter this industry; however, the more you know about botany, horticulture and science in general, the better equipped you'll be. As far as getting into this industry, move to California or another medical-marijuana state and start growing or working for a medical dispensary. You can also consider moving to Canada or Europe, but you will face tough immigration standards if you're an American citizen. That's a big problem these days: America has started so many wars that its citizens now face far tougher immigration policies.

Good on you to be fascinated with cannabis. Don't feel stupid; you're one of many—myself included—that have become interested in the plant and the best ways to grow it. In fact, there is even a grow shop in Barcelona, Spain, that is called simply "The Plant."

GROWING A SINGLE

What if I wanted to grow one plant just as a project, just to experiment and get a personal crop every time it buds? What would you recommend as a short, relatively potent and fast-growing plant?

Devin
Via Internet

Dear Devin,

The most popular auto-flowering plant that I know is Lowrider, which flowers regardless of the hours of light it receives in about 70 days from seed. But the high is not exceptional, and the yield is low—an ounce or less per plant. You can also buy “feminized” seeds. These plants take longer to flower—about 120 days—but they’re guaranteed to be female. Most feminized seeds will produce from 1 to 6 ounces per plant, depending on the strain and your expertise as a grower. One of my favorites is Jorge’s Diamonds #1, available from Dutch Passion. Unfortunately, it is not available in the USA, assuming that is where you live.

You can grow auto-flowering Lowrider or any strain of feminized seed either indoors or outdoors. My advice is to buy only high-quality feminized seed. Also, remember to harvest plants grown from feminized seed when they’re at peak ripeness. If they’re allowed to go too long, most strains of feminized seed have intersex (hermaphrodite) tendencies that will definitely start to show. On the other hand, only a few male flowers will sprout, so it’s not that big a problem.

A FEW SEEDS

I’m a cancer patient, and I’m growing four plants using a CF-lamp setup. My plants are about a week from harvest; they’re clones from a friend’s “mother” plant. This morning I found a lower branch that doesn’t get that much light, and there was a seed in each of the little buds! I check them several times every day, and the seeds weren’t visible earlier. What did I do wrong, and should I harvest early now that this has happened?

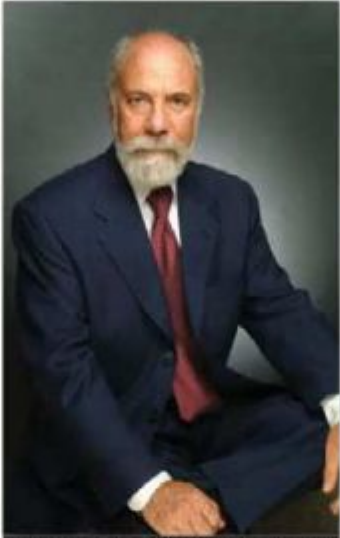

Worried First-Timer
Via Internet

Dear Worried,

My best wishes to you dealing with your cancer. I sincerely hope it’s in remission and that you’ll be rid of it and live a long life.

CF lamps come in many sizes. If you’re using enough watts (65 to 125 per plant), they will grow respectable buds. Lower branches get very little light under CFLs, especially if the foliage above them is dense and the plants are tall. The presence of seeds has nothing to do with the fact that your plants were grown under CFLs and some branches received little light. My guess is that the clones have developed intersex (hermaphrodite) buds that include a few male flowers on predominantly female plants. These male buds will shed pollen, and the lower female flowers were fertilized because the pollen fell down and landed on them. You should be on the lookout for any male flowers and remove any of them; definitely look for more seeds and remove them, too. Since you’ve found just a few of them, they’re nothing to worry about very seriously. Therefore, do not harvest until the female buds are ready, even if you find a few more seeds. The unfertilized female buds will develop to full potency.

CUT-RATE SEEDS

I want your opinion. I'm a 58-year-old medical-marijuana user. I was using medpot before it was legal. I purchased some Blue Cheese beans and thought it was the best I've ever smoked here in Florida—much better than Colombian Gold! The beans weren't the most expensive around; in fact, they're now half the price I paid for them. My question is: Which do you think is the best, longest-lasting and most fun strain all around? Some of the beans I've seen on the Net sell for anywhere from $25 to $200, so in your opinion, which strain do you think is best?

*Ric Yankee
Via Internet*

Dear Ric,
That's a tough question, and the answer will be quite subjective since there are so many different strains and tastes out there, Blue Cheese being just one of many. When the infamous website Overgrow.com was shut down by Canadian authorities, its "StrainGuide" listed more than 1,000 different strains or varieties of cannabis.

One of the uncertainties about the marijuana-seed business is that anybody who has seeds can sell them as whatever strain they want. Also, many seeds look the same—sure, there are big ones, little ones, dark ones, mottled ones, etc., but when you're buying them sight unseen in an illicit marketplace, you can never be sure of what you're getting. In fact, there are very few quality seed companies that can guarantee their stock—and even the best of them have had serious problems.

Most often, cut-rate seeds are produced outdoors or in less-than-controlled conditions. I stay away from such seeds, since they're generally worth what you pay for them. At the same time, buying expensive seeds is no real guarantee either, since you can get mediocre seeds that are simply overpriced.

Keep in mind that producing seeds indoors in a controlled environment is a tedious and time-consuming process that requires the vigilant eye of a qualified professional. Clandestine seed-production rooms can be discovered by cops or robbers at any time and put out of commission. These rooms are also subject to pest and disease attacks: I know of more than one room that was devastated by infestation, and an entire seed collection that was destroyed in a fire.

With these caveats in mind, some of my favorite high-quality seed companies—ones that guarantee their product—include Dutch Passion, Magnus Genetics and Serious Seeds. For more information about good seeds and the reliability of various companies, check seed-bankupdate.com.

FAN LEAVES

I've noticed in many of the pics of indoor grows in HIGH TIMES that most of the fan leaves are removed. I thought this was forbidden: Isn't that what feeds them light?

*Captain Bob
Via Internet*

This photo of a Romulan/Haze bud from Next Generation was taken with the shade leaves intact. I generally remove the big leaves so the bud will be in tighter focus.

Dear Captain Bob,
You have a very good point! I'm sure you've seen many of the bud photos taken by myself and other HIGH TIMES photographers that show no fan leaves. But there's a simple explanation for this (of course, I can't speak for the others, but I can speak for myself): I inevitably remove the fan leaves just before taking photos of ripe buds. When the fan leaves are left on the buds, they end up out of focus and obscuring all that delicious resin. I use a 100mm macro lens on my Canon EOS5 to photograph the buds. As you may know, macro lenses allow for little depth of field (i.e., the depth of the portion of the image that appears in focus). This distance is about 0.5 of an inch. When large fan leaves are present, they don't fit within these parameters.

You're exactly right: The big fan leaves are part of the food system that makes plants grow. They are necessary right up until the end of growth, so you should never remove fan leaves unless more than half of the leaf has been damaged by disease or lack of water, fertilizer or light.

GRASSY-SMELLING BUDS

I just wanted to know if there's a nutrient out there to give plants so that their buds will be tight and compact? Also, what's the best way to harvest the buds, from cutting them up to drying and curing? All my previous weed has been tied together, hung up and left to dry in the dark, but it's always come out looking bad and smelling like grass.

*Gus
Via Internet*

Dear Gus,

Use a nutrient supplement during flowering, such as PK 13/14 from Canna (P = phosphorus and K = potassium), and add it per the instructions on the label. There are other similar products, but I know this one well and it works.

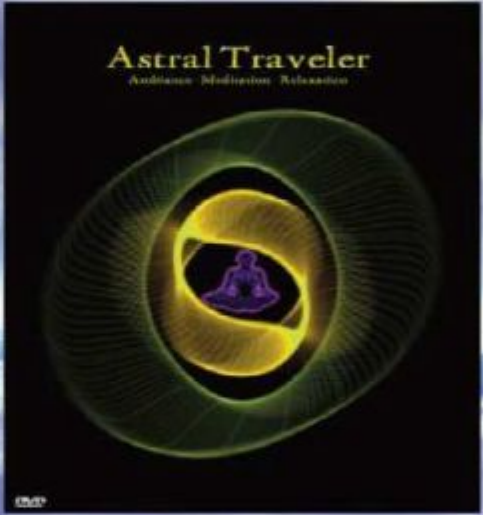

Your problem with harvesting is that you're tying the branches/buds together so that they don't dry evenly. Here's a thumbnail sketch on how to harvest, manicure and dry plants properly: Stop fertilizing seven to 10 days prior to harvest so the buds don't taste like fertilizer. (Many growers will give their plants 24 hours of total darkness before harvest; they say this increases resin content.) Remove large leaves a day or two before harvesting the plants. Also, withhold water so the plants are somewhat dry at harvest. Harvest in the morning, when THC content is at its peak. Harvest the entire plant one branch at a time by cutting near the base with pruners. Be careful not to jostle or mistreat branches. Manicure your plants upon harvest; the foliage is easiest to trim when it's green and supple. Buds also dry a little faster when there's less foliage. Use a pair of trimming scissors with small blades so that it's easy to reach between branches. Manicure your plants by cutting low-potency leaves at the point where they attach to the stem. Save the leaves—especially if covered with resin—for hash-making.

Dry the branches by hanging them from a line, and do not let them touch. This will avoid disease problems and make the drying consistent. As you've discovered, proper drying is very important: It converts THC from its crude, acidic, non-psychoactive form to its neutral, psychoactive form. The grassy-smelling buds that you harvested were not very potent for this reason. Drying also converts 75% or more of the freshly harvested plant into water vapor and other gases. If the buds are dried too quickly and unevenly, chlorophyll and other pigments, starch, and nitrates are all trapped within the plant tissue, making it burn unevenly and taste bad or "green." When plants are dried relatively slowly—over five to seven days or even longer—the moisture evaporates evenly into the air, yielding uniformly dry buds with minimal THC decomposition. That's why slowly dried buds taste sweet and smoke smooth: Taste and aroma improve when the pigments break down. The best air temperature for this process is between 65°F and 75°F (18°C to 24°C), and the humidity should be kept from 45% to 55%. ✨

GARDEN CALENDAR

OUTDOORS

Christmastime is here, and it's time to relax a little and enjoy the holiday season and all the accompanying cheer. Now is the time to pull out your special stash! Growers in the North can make plans for next year's crop, and most Southern growers will be harvesting their last tropical sativas this month (if they're not already out and drying).

Hit our site (hightimes.com) to see which strains took honors at the 21st Annual HIGH TIMES Cannabis Cup. Use Google to look up the winning strains and get more insight on growing them in your climate. Remember to gather all the grow information you can before plunking down your payment—and make sure you're buying the actual winners and not some cheap imitation.

This month ushers in the shortest day of the year, December 22. Everywhere in the Northern Hemisphere, plants will receive exactly 12 hours of sunlight and 12 hours of darkness. But the sun is at such a low angle in the sky that light intensity is greatly diminished.

Growers in warm climates can continue to plant and grow all winter long, even though growth will be slow. Continue watering small plants, but make sure not to overwater. Outdoor plants can also be dug up and brought indoors or moved into a greenhouse to keep them warm and growing a little faster. You can supplement light when the sun goes down to give them 18 to 24 hours of light per day so they'll stay in vegetative growth. If plants are flowering now, the extra light will cause them to resume vegetative growth in six to eight weeks.

Give your plants just a little fertilizer now: Slow-growing plants are easy to overfertilize. Give them just enough fertilizer to help them stay green and healthy. Don't forget to flush their containers monthly.

Trim off dead and dying leaves. Remove only leaves that are more than half-damaged. Carefully check plants for spider mites and other pests.

Germinate seeds indoors so that seedlings and vegetative plants will be ready to move outdoors to the greenhouse or guerrilla patch in a couple of months.

Mulch soil outdoors. It might sound crazy, but mulching soil between plantings will improve the structure and biology of the soil as well as help retain nutrients.

Take winter walks and drive around the countryside to scout out more outdoor plots. The bare trees in winter make searching for a new guerrilla patch much easier.

Inspect dried buds and look for signs of mold or excess moisture. Take a good whiff to make sure buds don't smell wet, which is one of the first signs of fungal attacks.

Start planning your spring crop now.

INDOORS

December is normally very cold in the Northern Hemisphere, especially at higher elevations. Cold outdoor air should be warmed before entering the growroom. Don't let cold air blow on your plants, as this will cause them to grow very slowly.

Diseases and pests will always take their best shot at moving into your growroom. Mature pests will start laying eggs and reproducing the day they sneak into the room. Control any problems immediately by spot-spraying or covering the entire crop.

Leach containers with a mild (5%) nutrient solution. Flush containers with three times as much nutrient solution as the volume of growing medium. Leaching soil and soilless mixes will clean out the built-up salts that accumulate from fertilizers or impure water.

Do not overwater. Plants tend to use less water when the weather gets cold in winter; they'll often grow more slowly, too. Don't let your soil get or stay soggy. One of the signs of soggy soil is the presence of fungus gnats; you'll see these little members of the flea family springing around on the soil surface. Fungus gnats thrive in a wet environment. Check for them by carefully lifting the root-ball from the container and setting it on white plastic or paper. Damaged roots will be brown and slimy. Use VectoBack or Gnatrol to control fungus gnats.

Check pH and EC (ppm) of the nutrient solution regularly as weather conditions change outdoors. Use an aquarium pump to heat the nutrient solution if the temperature drops below 55°F (12.8°C). Top off reservoirs as needed.

Buds are more susceptible to botrytis (bud mold) now. Check buds on flowering plants carefully: Botrytis attacks buds from the inside out and can easily go undetected if you don't keep looking for it.

Stinky bud odors can waft outdoors and are very easy to distinguish in cold weather, especially since no other plants are actively growing or blooming. Take a walk around the building where your garden is growing and sniff around to make sure there are no unwanted telltale odors.

The roof above the growroom should look like all the other roofs in the neighborhood. If all of your neighbors' roofs have snow on them, yours should, too.

Indoor humidity often climbs when outdoor temperatures are low. The problem is most acute when the lights are out. Plot the humidity levels on a piece of graph paper one hour after the lights go out.

Take clones and plant seedlings for the next crop. Plant seedlings a month before you plan to move them into the room.

Keep room clean. Always clean your growroom completely after harvest. I like to clean it the same day so that I can move the next crop in and get growing.✿

2009 ULTIMATE GROW CALENDAR

HIGH TIMES
OCTOBER 2009

INDOOR
Indoor growing is a controlled environment and is the most consistent way to grow cannabis. It allows you to control the light, temperature, humidity, and nutrients. This is the best way to grow cannabis in a small space or in a climate that is not ideal for growing outdoors.

OUTDOOR
Outdoor growing is a more natural way to grow cannabis. It allows you to take advantage of the natural light and weather. However, it is more susceptible to pests and diseases. It is also more difficult to control the environment.

NEXT MONTH IN HIGH TIMES

GANJA FOR A GRAND!

Knockin' it down a notch so you can bring it up, we reveal some budget-savvy grow ops that will let you get started growing your own ganja at relatively no cost. Learn how to build a small growroom for only $1,000. You'll save thousands more by never having to buy pot again! Just think: no more dealers, no more iffy weed—because you'll be growing your own favorite flavors! Cultivation Editor Nico Escondido teaches you how.

POT & POTENCY

For the past few months, the media has been running panic-inducing stories about the alleged increase in pot potency. Contributor Paul Armentano separates the truth from the propaganda for an incisive look at the meaning of high THC levels.

VAPORIZER PARADE

Many medical-marijuana users depend on vaporizers that heat rather than burn your buds, allowing the active compounds contained in the plant to boil off in a healthier vapor. As it happens, non-medical users dig vaporizers, too. We take a look at some of the top new models.

THE STONY AWARDS

Hollywood's highest awards show goes to Malibu as the Eighth Annual Stony Awards hands out bongs for the year's best marijuana-related films and videos. Will Pineapple Express make a clean sweep? And who will win the coveted Stoner of the Year award?

UNDER OUR SKIN

As tattooing seeps deeper into the skin of mainstream America, more and more people are pushing the limits when it comes to choosing an epidermal manifesto. So it stands to reason that pot tattoos are becoming increasingly popular. Whether you're the inker or the inked, pot tats are more than a statement—they're a commitment!

PLUS: An eye-popping pictorial featuring the "Nugz of '09"; and is Phish on the comeback trail?

IS TOO LONG

Have you been in a federal prison for over 10 years on a marijuana conviction? Do you know someone who has? HIGH TIMES wants to tell your story.

It is HIGH TIMES' firm belief that crimes involving cannabis resulting in incarceration for over 10 years constitutes cruel and unusual punishment. We are interested in talking to prisoners who have been in the federal system for over a decade solely for marijuana offenses (i.e., no guns, violence or other drugs involved). This is for a new project whereby we examine your case and detail your story in the magazine.
