MONSTER

The glass pipes of the artist known as Ghost scare the shit out of tokers.
Marijuana becomes a macabre experience
when you toke on Frankensteins and skulls.

PIPES

Photos by Ryan Miller & Dan Skye

What's the proper stoner etiquette when someone passes you a pipe that is so hideous, so grotesque, that using it to get high actually seems more repellent than staying straight? What do you do when the pipe you're expected to smoke from causes you to recoil—in other words, when it actually makes you scaredy-fraid? And we're not talking here about some grimy, crud-caked bong that hasn't been cleaned since the Clinton administration, but rather nightmarish pieces that will influence the effect of every toke you take.

Currently, there exists a genre of smokeware available for those who prefer a dollop of horror when getting high. At a recent "tobacco accessories" convention, stoner art lovers flocked to one particular booth showcasing an absolutely alarming array of gruesome glass: Frankensteins, weird skulls, exposed brains sliced by scythes and, scariest of all, a zombie Hitler.

But do these ghoulish pipes actually sell?

According to Ghost, the glass artist primarily responsible for this freak show, the answer is a resounding yes. "Despite the recession," he says, "I'm having my best year ever."

He's been working behind the torch for nearly six years now and has developed into one of the industry's premier glassblowers. "I've always been into art of any kind, and it's been great to be able to do this," he says. "I'm buying a house. My family and I are comfortable—but most important, I'm happy!"

Be very, very afraid.

MONSTER PIPES

Top artist Banjo exhibited this headhunter at the "Suck On It" pipe art show in Chicago. It's actually a sherlock. The headdress is the bowl and the left arm is the stem.

Star glassblower Clinton created this blue dragon sherlock. It boasts amazing functionality when it's upright, and weighs over 4 lbs.

You'd never guess that looking at his pipes, however. "I guess I just have a different perspective on life," Ghost explains. "People see a butterfly and say, 'Wow, that's a beautiful creature!' But have you ever seen a butterfly up close? It's the creepiest-looking fuckin' bug ever! I can look at simple things and see something dark. I guess I'm just messed up in the head." He adds with a laugh: "I can take simple objects, look deep inside them and find the darkness."

He cites top artists like Clinton and Banjo (whose pot-leaf bong graced the March '08 cover) as inspiration. But Bear Claw, whose work has often appeared in HIGH TIMES, transported Ghost to the next level. "Bear Claw's work really floored me—crazy little creatures! That's when I saw the potential of glass art and where I could go with it, not just be a production guy. I saw the true art form."

Glassblowing is perhaps closest to animation, wherein the creator's most soaring and disturbing visual flights of fancy can be made real. But animation exists only on projected film or video; glass art is tangible—and, for our purposes, smokeable.

Ghost's first attempt at a Frankenstein was ambitious. He tried to create his birth with electrodes surrounding the head. Ghost uses glass powder in most of his pieces. The eyes are pre-made millefioris; a tungsten pick was used for facial features.

This dragon motorcyclist is another product of Banjo's imagination. It's a waterpipe with wheels that move, accessorized with spinners.

MONSTER PIPES

From Ghost's "Godfathers of Horror," these 18 mm. tube slides are just smaller than your fist. Ghost made them big in order to allow for necessary detail in facial features.

Ghost's voodoo doll was created using glass powder to achieve a seamless finish. A hidden bowl piece is disguised by the skull resting on the hand.

However, the functionality of these pipes seems to be purely theoretical. For one thing, they invariably cost a fortune—and shattering one, we guarantee, will be an emotional experience. For another, if you do actually manage to smoke from one, you'll find cleaning it next to impossible.

Even so, the demand for high-end, often outlandish smokeware has only increased in recent years, and many art shows now feature exhibitions by the top glass-pipe artists. As far as gifts for stoners go, there is perhaps no better item extant. But does a brain being cleaved in two, with two bulging eyes gaping in terror, really show a fellow toker how much you care?

"I don't know," says Ghost. "Maybe pipes like these are just a good way to get revenge."—Dan Skye

"The Scorpiad" is a 16" tall diffused bubbler. Ghost used a faux wood effect on the horns surrounding the piece using a tungsten pick and glass powders, and finished it off with a light sandblasting.

THE WAR ON SCOTT WALT

By Chris Simunek

Scott Walt is not a murderer or rapist or even a dealer of harmful drugs, yet he's been in federal prison for over 15 years. His crime? He sold a plant that grows wild out of God's green earth.

Sometime around October 3, 1994, Scott Walt went surfing in the Pacific Ocean, as he did nearly every day—a luxury afforded him by his life as both a carpenter's foreman for a large government contractor and a marijuana dealer.

The waves had been his passion since he was nine years old, growing up in Encinitas, CA, and he felt lucky that he was able to spend as much time on the beach as he did. It would be hard to argue that, up to that point, Scott's life had been anything but a success. Eight years before, he'd married Dawn, a beautiful blonde California girl, and they now had two children who were just starting school. The family went to Club Med twice a year. Scott had bought a house on a lake stocked with bluegill, catfish, bass and perch; his wife drove a Lincoln Continental, though Scott, a nature lover, preferred his Ford F-350 four-by-four.

So there was nothing particularly extraordinary about that trip to the beach one day in early October 15 years ago, other than the fact that Scott hasn't surfed or even seen a beach since then.

Around the same time that Scott was enjoying the ocean for the very last time, Jurgen Hans Thode, a courier within the marijuana business that Scott was connected to, was selling him out to the Feds. Thode, a Vietnam vet, lived in a world of illusion. Though little more than a mule, he fancied himself the Tony Montana of marijuana—the problem was, he lacked heart and street sense. When Thode went to pick up 57 pounds from a group of Mexicans, he had no idea the Feds were on to him. He flipped the moment he was caught. Then they took him back to his house and plotted the ruination of Scott Walt's life.

Scott Walt's ocean-themed art.

Scott and Sabina.

He's been incarcerated for 15 years and is only two-thirds of the way through his sentence—all on the testimony of one man who was caught with 57 pounds of weed in his hands.

That night, Thode called Scott and asked to borrow $1,200 so he could go to Minnesota to make a delivery. The next morning, Scott went to visit him. While they were in Thode's garage, Scott noticed undercover cops across the street. Sensing a setup, but knowing that he had no weed on him, either in his truck or at home, Scott figured he was in the clear and turned to leave. Thode asked him how much he should charge on his next delivery. Shrugging him off, Scott said, "I don't know—800 or 850," then got in his truck and split. Two sheriff's cars rolled up on him at a stoplight, and that was the end. They put Scott in a car, drove into an alley and handed him over to the Feds. In an attempt to flip Scott, one of the agents told him: "OJ has a better chance of getting off." Scott kept his mouth shut, but the agent's comment proved prophetic.

The Feds tore through his house, but found nothing in the way of drugs, scales or paraphernalia—only $7,500 that came from the Mary Kay Cosmetics business that his wife ran from their home. The agents told Dawn that Scott would be out on bail in a few days. He hasn't been home since.

While Scott was sitting in a federal lockup in San Diego, the Feds took Thode to Minnesota to set up a number of buyers. There was something about the limelight that appealed to this Vietnam vet, who envisioned himself the Scarface of sinsemilla. They put him up in a hotel room and, one by one, Thode lured low-level marijuana dealers to their doom. Before testifying against Scott, he participated in "practice" trial against a kid who'd had the misfortune of carrying a 9mm handgun when he was arrested. Thode must have done pretty well, because the kid got 17 years. Then it was back to California for the main event.

Claiming that Scott Walt "ran a drug empire from behind iron gates to shield himself from law enforcement," the US Attorney put Thode on the stand, where he proceeded to spin tales that lessened his own participation and increased Scott's culpability. On the testimony of one man, and with no surveillance evidence, no wiretaps, no marijuana found in his possession at any time—only a few pieces of scrap paper found in Thode's home with numbers written on them—Scott Walt was convicted of being the kingpin of a far-reaching conspiracy to traffic marijuana from the West Coast through Minnesota to parts east. A first, the Feds seized Scott's house, because Thode had testified that he once saw 500 pounds there (a jury eventually gave it back). They also took his truck, because Thode recalled seeing 100 pounds in it, too. Scott's assets were frozen, damning him to a court-appointed attorney. Aside from the arresting officers, Thode was the government's only witness.

At the end of the trial—after stating that he was hamstrung by mandatory-minimum laws that forced him to hand down a sentence far greater than that given to most murderers—the judge reluctantly sentenced Scott Walt to 24 years and four months in jail. (The Feds had been asking for 30, because the kid in Minnesota was found with a gun.) As for Thode, he did one year in FCC Lompoc, a minimum-security prison camp 175 miles northwest of Los Angeles, and is now quite possibly living in a basement apartment near you.

After a few years, Scott's wife Dawn divorced him; he's had to watch his two children, now 18 and 20, grow up on visiting days. He's been incarcerated for 15 years and is only two-thirds of the way through his sentence—all on the testimony of one man who was caught with 57 pounds of weed in his hands.

Scott Walt is down but not out. He's one of the most positive-thinking individuals you could ever meet. When asked recently about his feelings toward Jurgen Hans Thode, he said: "The universe has a funny way of balancing those things out. I have spent far too many years dealing with this existence to hold any deep regrets for Mr. Thode. I amuse myself (and others) with the proposition that my crime is the lack of character judgment, and my sentence is based on that error."

Scott is currently engaged to Sabina, a woman who understands his situation and will wait for him to get out. With Sabina's help, and in conjunction with his former wife Dawn, he's been raising his kids as best he can from behind prison walls. In his spare time, he paints pictures from memory of the Pacific Ocean, whose waves it was once his passion to conquer. ✨

Med Pot Warning: What Are You Really Smoking?

By Alex Allan Anderson

Are you aware of what you're really smoking? Can you recall a time when you took a hit of what you thought was going to be some great smoke only to find yourself choking and gagging? Even worse it was hard to keep lit, tasted terrible, irritated your throat and lungs and produced a heavy black ash.

Licensed medical cannabis patient and grower Gino Yordanov offers you an insider's look at the direct causes of poor-quality medicine. That's because Yordanov is co-founder of Advanced Nutrients, the only hydroponics company that's logged nearly a decade of cannabis growing research into plant quality, yields and potency.

"I always wondered what caused that stinging harshness in my throat when I medicated myself with buds I purchased," Yordanov recalls. "So I had my team of scientists find out the causes. And here's what they discovered..."

You're Smoking Too Much Phosphorus

One of the main causes of all that hacking and coughing is plants are grown with too much phosphorus. Another critical finding that made a significant difference was the particular forms of phosphorus and nutrient ratio's used to grow with.

Even more troubling, what are the rest of the fertilizer's essential ingredients "cut" with? Take calcium nitrate for instance it's made up of 15.5% nitrogen and 11% calcium, so what's the other 73.5% made out of?

Well, as it turns out, actually it matters a lot, especially the composition and purity level of that "cut."

"When calcium nitrate is not analyzed or sourced incorrectly, the remaining percentage of filler material slows crop growth and adds harshness to your buds. And calcium nitrate is just one example – what about all the other ingredients in a nutrient? Obviously it all matters.

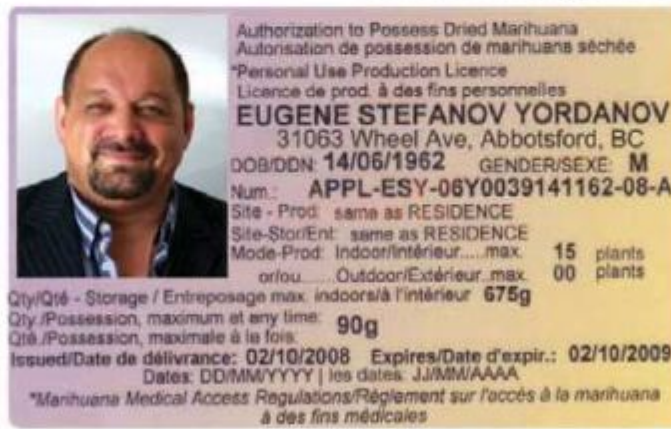

But here's the most important part... the correct ratios of a cannabis fertilizer's macro and micro nutrients make a huge difference in your medicine's smoothness. Plus it's a known fact that the further you move away from feeding cannabis plants their ideal nutrient ratios, potency and yield rapidly deteriorate.

You see, cannabis uses a small amount of phosphorus during flowering, what it really loves to use is nitrogen and potassium. We discovered this because our scientists have taken thousands of weekly tissue samples from buds, stems, leaves and roots of many varieties using gas chromatography analysis throughout all phases of cannabis growth.

Nutrient Companies Are Harming You

And to make matters worse, nutrient companies are over-providing phosphorus in hydroponic bloom fertilizers. And to compound problems, they use high levels of ingredients like mono ammonium phosphate (MAP) or diammonium phosphate (DAP). These harshness culprits will make you cough a lung out. Really, it's that bad. Hey, I realize this may sound a bit self serving but obviously I care about what patients and I are smoking and of course the facts are the facts."

Licensed Medical Cannabis Grower and Patient Gino Yordnaov gives you an insider's look on how you'll absolutely ensure you're getting safer, smoother and more potent medicine.

The good news is Yordanov's researchers found combinations of specialized nutrients, plant and mineral extracts, root enhancers, vitamins, inoculants, growth and bloom co-factors that consistently produce bigger yields, higher amounts of THC, sweeter smelling aromatic compounds and tastier smoother smoking buds.

In fact, when Advanced Nutrients formulas were tested by Dr. Mahmoud A. ElSohly, (Director of the US government's marijuana research farm at the University of Mississippi), ElSohly discovered that Advanced Nutrients increased THC percentages by 40% while increasing plant and bud biomass by 21% compared to the formulations he was using. In the interest of full disclosure, Dr ElSohly is now an Advanced Nutrients customer.

And Yordanov requires his company's scientists and quality control technicians to continually upgrade formulations to produce the absolute maximum bud weight and quality.

Your Only Clean Safe Source For Pure Grown Medicine

As the only hydroponics nutrients company founder who is also an officially-government licensed medical cannabis patient and grower, Yordanov pledges it's his solemn duty to guarantee Advanced Nutrients produces clean, convenient, yield-boosting formulas that ensure patients' health and safety.

"I want the finest medicine for myself and all patients. Whether you purchase from a medical cannabis dispensary or grow your own, clearly this is so important to your health that you should insist your buds were grown with hydroponics nutrients designed and tested specifically for medical cannabis."

Ask If Your Dispensary Medicine Was Grown With Advanced Nutrients...

- Because you want your buds to taste great, and you want your buds grown with fertilizers that contain superior sources of phosphorus and contain top quality, analyzed ingredients that don't contain any poor quality filler.
- Because you want your buds to have the highest potency genetically possible and grown with the correct fertilizer ratios of macro and micronutrients.
- Because you want the safest, smoothest smoke and the quality of your health demands it.

This roomful of feminized, auto-flowering AK-47 x Lowryder #2 was planted from seed and is ready to harvest just 70 days later!

ALL YOU NEED TO GROW

ANSWERS & PHOTOS BY JORGE CERVANTES

GOOD TASTE

What can I do during the growing process to make my marijuana taste better? Also, what steps should I take to make it fluffier and less dense? Can I start growing in a 5-gallon container and then keep the plant in there five months?

*Canary
Via Internet*

Dear Canary,
Strong, sweet, great-tasting marijuana buds are the Holy Grail sought by every grower. After all, French chefs prefer properly grown organic vegetables not because they're organic, but because they taste best. The same is true with marijuana.

The most important thing you can do to make your weed taste better is to keep your plants strong and healthy their entire life, and don't let them suffer stress. For example, an excess of water (or a lack of it) will create stress in plants. Stress can also be caused by an overabundance of fertilizer in the soil: When some elements are too plentiful, they "lock out" other nutrients, preventing them from being taken in by the plant; this also impairs fluid flow within the cells of your plant. Sodium is the biggest culprit here, so use clean water with a low content in sodium and other dissolved solids. Do not let excess fertilizer salts accumulate in the soil. The best way to guard against excess nutrient buildup is to flush the pots every month with two to three times as much water as the volume of growing medium.

Also, do grow organically: use organic soil, organic fertilizers, and organic measures for pest and disease control. (But remember that organic fertilizers can also be over-applied and build up in the soil.) Keep the temperatures in the range of 70°F to 75°F, and the humidity levels at about 50% both day and night. (The temperatures can fluctuate a few degrees up or down, but in general, the less the fluctuation, the better. At night, the temperature can dip as low as 60°F and cause little stress to plants.)

I'm not really sure why you want fluffy, "less dense" buds. Fluffy or airy buds do not mean that the plants will taste better; in fact, in most cases, fluffy buds are a sign of heat stress and poor horticultural practices—not a recipe for great-tasting buds.

Roots from plants that are started or transplanted directly into 5-gallon containers tend to grow to the perimeter of the container and encircle it. This means they don't penetrate much of the interior soil; instead, a layer of roots forms on the inside perimeter of the container—and, as the container warms and cools, the roots suffer heat and moisture stress. This is one reason why, the longer a plant grows indoors, the more time there is for problems to crop up.

INDUCED SEX REVERSAL

In the past you've mentioned a product called Stamen-it!, but many people seem to be having trouble finding it, including myself. Any suggestions?

*Tek-One
Via Internet*

Dear Tek-One,
This is one sexy product! At all seven of the European cannabis fairs I attend every year, at least one person asks me about Stamen-it! I've answered this question before in my column, but since I continue to receive queries about it, I'll answer it again. Only one company produces Stamen-it!, and they have changed their address since the last time I mentioned them. I've added this information to my website, marijuanagrowing.com, so that people around the world can have an easier time finding it.

Stamen-it! is used to chemically induce female plants to form male flowers. This kind of sex reversal can also be induced with an application of gibberellic acid—which is dangerous and difficult to use—or of silver thiosulfate solution (STS), which is made from the chemicals used in photography. In the latter case, pre-flowering female cannabis plants are sprayed with a diluted STS and induced to flower with a 12/12-hour day/night light schedule. Pollen-bearing male flowers can be harvested in 35 to 40 days on most strains.

If you're interested in finding out more about STS, just Google the words "silver thiosulfate solution marijuana" and you'll find several websites with instructions on making and using it. But for most people, the best bet is simply to use Stamen-it!, which also induces male flowers. You can order it by contacting plantaegenomic@live.co.uk.

However, if you want to avoid using chemicals altogether and have a measure of patience, you can also practice the "Rodelization" method for inducing sex reversal, which was developed by the master grower and breeder Soma. You can find the instructions for this technique on the HIGH TIMES website at hightimes.com/grow/soma/622.

HIV-POSITIVE MEDICAL GROWER

I am HIV-positive and would like to grow the medicine I need, preferably in an indoor growroom. I live in Kentucky. Should I move to another state to grow legally?

Casey
 Via Internet

Dear Casey,
 I wish you a long life and hope your condition progresses slowly. Growing can be a bit of work if you're frail. Normally, growing indoors is quite simple—however, Kentucky is not a marijuana-friendly state. Of the current 14 medical-marijuana states (Alaska, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Montana, New Mexico, Nevada, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont and Washington), California is the probably the most tolerant towards medical marijuana. There are many growers and patients in California, and much of Northern California is rural, so it may remind you of Kentucky. As a first step, Google the words "medical marijuana California" and you will find many sites to help you with your decision. Also check into the forums on these sites: You can meet helpful people there who can give you a well-informed and realistic local perspective on your potential new home. These sites and forums are also filled with useful information to help you plan your future garden.

My other advice is to keep your crop 100% organic—use organic soil, organic fertilizer, and organic disease and pest controls.

TOO MUCH LIGHT

I just made a nice growroom, 7 by 7 feet. I have three clones that I'm planning to grow there. My buddy suggests that I use two 1,000-watt bulbs for vegging on an 18/6-hour day/night light schedule and three 1,000-watt bulbs for flowering on a 12/12-hour light schedule. I'll be using Hortilux bulbs with Lumatek ballasts. The room is covered in reflective material. The electric rates in my area are pretty high (22 cents a kilowatt), and my current electric bill is approximately $100 a month. My projected electric bill following the above schedule, with AC, exhaust fans and so forth added, will be approximately $450 a month. Would it be practicable to go with one less bulb for vegging and flowering to keep my electric bill bearable and still have a decent harvest?

Twinkle Toes
 Via Internet

Dear Twinkle Toes,
 Cut down on expenses and potential problems by using only the amount of light you need. Extra light that shines on the floor or wall is simply wasted. Remember that the plants are small now and must grow a lot to fill the room. It will take many months to fill the entire floor space of the room with three clones. Employ fewer watts to lower your electrical consumption and heat output. Huddle the clones together under a compact fluorescent lamp (CFL) until they're about 1 foot tall, which usually takes three to four weeks. You can purchase a 65-watt CFL for less than \$40 at Home Depot or some other home-improvement store. A single 65-watt CFL will illuminate up to 18 square inches. This works out as follows:  $65 \times 18 = 1,170$ , or 1.17 kilowatt hours (KWH). At the rate you're paying, this amounts to less than \$0.30 a day, and would add about \$9 to your electric bill ( $\$0.30 \times 30 \text{ days} = \$9$ ). Even if you need two 65-watt CFLs, the amount added to your electric bill would be less than \$20 in the first month.

If you want the clones to grow more than 1 foot tall before you induce flowering, they will need more intense light. Add another CFL or a small metal halide (MH) lamp, either 250 or 400 watts. Either lamp will suffice to grow the plants to 2 feet tall. The cost to run a 400-watt lamp for a month at $0.22 per kWh is less than $16 per month (0.4 x 18 hours = 72 kWh x $0.22 = $15.84 for 30 days).

Next, replace the 400-watt MH lamp with a single 600-watt high-pressure sodium (HPS) lamp with an efficient reflective hood. Note that a 600-watt lamp can be placed closer to the plants and illuminate them with almost the same intensity as a 1,000-watt lamp. Induce flowering with a 12/12-hour light schedule. Plants will show signs of flowering in less than two weeks; the first signs will be an elongation between the branches and the appearance of small white "hairs" or pistils. The stems will keep elongating and flowers will continue to form for the next several weeks. Most cannabis strains finish flowering in eight to nine weeks. The cost of running a 600-watt lamp for 12 hours at $0.22 per kWh is $1.584 a day, or $47.52 a month. Adding everything up, we get:

- 1 65-watt CFL 30 days = $9.00
- 1 400-watt MH 30 days = $15.84
- 1 600-watt HPS 60 days = $95.04
- Total = $119.88 in added electrical costs, spread over the course of four months.

And if it turns out that your plants need more light in the flowering stage, you can simply add the 400-watt lamp.

APHIDS

I'm growing outdoor plants, and I was wondering how can I fight aphids and keep them from getting on my plants?

Via Internet

Dear E.M.,

Aphids are not one of the major pests that attack cannabis plants, either indoors or out. The first step to effective pest control is to identify the perpetrator. Aphids, or plant lice, are about the size of a pinhead and are easy to spot with the naked eye (though you can also use a 10x magnifying glass for better identification). You'll find aphids in all climates where cannabis grows; they're usually grayish to black, but can also be green or even pink. Most aphids have no wings, but those that do have wings that are about four times the size of their body. Look for them on leaf undersides, especially on the new growth of weak or stressed plants. Aphids are usually found in groups, and give birth to mainly female larvae without mating. A healthy aphid can push out up to a hundred live larvae daily. The main signs of aphid infestation are slow growth, yellow and wilting leaves, and a sticky honeydew that will attract ants, who feed on it.

Fortunately, insecticidal soap and pyrethrum-based sprays are very effective against aphids. Apply these two or three times at five- to 10-day intervals and your aphid problem should be easily solved.

MORTGAGE BROKER TO MEDICAL GROWER

I want to tell you how much you've been helping my family and me. I live in Michigan, a state that just legalized medical marijuana. I started my own grow-room last October. That same month, I shut the doors of my mortgage company and let more than a dozen employees go. This was one of the worst days in my life—I don't fail often, and when I do, it hurts. Even though factors beyond my control affected the outcome, I know I made mistakes. I just wanted to help people, but the further I got up the ladder, the more I saw how horrible corporate America is. The greed is unreal, and I want no part of that now. I guess things really do happen for a reason.

Warlock from Magus Genetics is a consistently heavy producer whether grown indoors, outdoors or in a greenhouse.

I'm a poor kid from a trailer park who moved into a corporate office at the age of 27. I've come a long way from the heroin addiction and alcoholism that my parents exposed me to. I will never forget what it means to be sick—truly sick.

I'm married and we just had a baby, and we also have custody of my 11-year-old daughter. I just told her about my love of pot and why I was going to grow it. I was a little nervous about doing so—I still remember the propaganda from the days when I was in school, not to mention how I felt about my mother the more I learned about her and whoever my father was. But my daughter took it very well: She just looked at me and said, "So are you protesting, like the Boston Tea Party?" "Yes, I am," I answered with a big grin, not needing to offer any further explanation.

These days, a friend and I are looking into getting together with others in our state to form the first medical co-op in Michigan.

Thanks again for all the work you've done for me and so many others.

T.F.

Via Internet

Dear T.F.,
 Thanks for your inspiring letter. More true, honest and sincere people like you will help put an end to this crazy war on the innocent people and patients that have used and continue to use this wonderful plant. These days, we have a new administration and a new Drug Czar who are not using cannabis as a political football. To date, President Obama appears to be more concerned with solving the economic crisis and putting an end to the inequities perpetuated by the Bush administration.

HOT-WEATHER STRAINS

I'm a first-time grower in Central Florida. I want to start out with six plants. What strain would you recommend? I'll be growing outdoors and indoors on about 10 acres of land in the middle of nowhere. I wish to grow something easy and worthwhile. I'd like to keep my plants indoors at night and outdoors during the day. The temperature around here gets to be about 90°F during the day and 60°F to 70°F at night.

Thanks again from the Sunshine State!

D.W.

Via Internet

Dear D.W.,
 Cannabis growth slows to a crawl once the temperature hits 85°F. If you're growing outdoors, find a place with a natural breezeway to keep the temperature a little bit cooler so that your plants will continue growing at a normal clip. Planting in a location with filtered sunlight will also keep them a little cooler. One of the main problems in the tropical and subtropical South is that nighttime temperatures can get so high that plant growth is impaired. Again, a natural breezeway will help overcome this problem if you're growing outdoors. Keep an air-circulation fan going all the time when plants are indoors to keep them cool—but avoid blowing air directly on the plants or they will dry out quickly and use too much water, causing stress. Plants in your climate grow best during the off-season, when temperatures are a bit cooler.

There are many strains that grow well in hot weather. Chocolate Chunk and SAGE from TH Seeds and Thaitanic from Flying Dutchmen are the first ones that come to mind. You can also check with local growers in your area to see if they have any suggestions.

AWFUL TRANSPLANTS

I had beautiful seedlings that were 4 to 5 inches tall, with two branch nodes and two healthy-looking leaves. For the next stage, I transplanted them from Dixie cups into pots. What a mistake! They were under fluorescents, and I put them under a 400-watt light. Now they're looking awful. Will they recover?

FleetwoodMac
Via Internet

Dear FleetwoodMac,

It sounds like the little seedlings are suffering from several kinds of shock, including transplant shock and excessive heat and light. Fluorescents emit much less intense light than a 400-watt MH lamp does. Too much light will heat leaf exteriors and, more importantly, their interiors. This causes the plants' internal chemistry to speed up, which in turn requires them to consume much more water. Also, upon transplanting, the roots were probably jostled around a bit and damaged, so they're not able to supply enough water to keep the plants healthy.

Keep in mind that transplanting is one of the most traumatic events that a plant can suffer. Once transplanted, the roots need time to settle in and get used to the new soil. Roots have thousands of microscopic hairs that are torn away during transplanting. These root hairs often must be regrown, and the plants need time to accustom themselves to their new environment.

The next time you transplant, disturb the root-ball as little as possible. Give your plants plenty of water and use a transplanting aide that contains vitamin B1 to help ease the shock. Give them a few days of fluorescent light and cool temperatures, from 65°F to 70°F, until the leaves perk up and the plants start growing again.

My guess is that your seedlings will recover, but slowly, and they'll be so weak that pests and diseases could easily become a problem. I would plant more seeds and make sure to transplant according to the guidelines above to ensure strong plants in the future. ✨

GARDEN CALENDAR

SEPTEMBER 2009

OUTDOORS

Temperatures have reached abnormal highs and lows in September over the last few years. Global warming is the reason. Growers can benefit from the new highs in some climates by taking harvests later in the season, although northern climates (and some southern climates too) may receive more rain. If this is the case in your area, don't forget to use plastic to keep the moisture from wetting your beautiful buds—this will help stave off botrytis (bud rot) as well. Warm-weather gardens should be shaded if temperatures ascend beyond 85°F in the daytime or at night.

Always be sure to keep your plants well watered until a few days before harvest, especially if September is dry in your area. Withholding water reduces yields.

Stop fertilizing a week or two before harvest so plants don't retain residual nutrient salts. Continue fertilizing with a flowering formula that has less nitrogen and more phosphorus and potassium if you plan to harvest next month.

Use mulch to slow the rate of moisture escaping the soil. Mulch will also attract moisture when the air temperature drops, forming dew in the morning. Keep adding more layers of mulch as the lower layers decay. Anything can be used for mulch—paper, biodegradable plastic, nearby native foliage, etc.—as long as it covers the soil. Pull the mulch back from plant stems a few inches to discourage mice and voles from chewing on them.

Pests and diseases can really take a toll on slow-growing flowering plants late in the season. Mother Nature sends signals that the plants are at the end of their life cycle, and therefore at their weakest point. This means that pests and diseases will be making a final push to eat more, suck more plant sap and lay more eggs. Ask the workers at your local nursery or check with the county extension service for localized pest and disease problems. Corn earworms and molds—especially bud mold—are some of the worst problems that a grower can encounter now.

Here's a shot of an auto-flowering, feminized AK-47 x Lowryder #2 about 30 days from seed. This plant produced almost 2 ounces of dried bud!

Early indica-dominant strains are ready to harvest in mid- to late September. Check the buds for peak ripeness: It's worth being patient now in order to harvest your buds when they're completely ripe. But if your plants are a few days from harvest and a big rainstorm is moving in, it's best to harvest before the storm arrives.

Plenty of hunters are out and about in the country now, and many others start scouting the terrain before hunting season starts. Bow and black-powder rifle seasons generally begin before the main hunting season. Be sure to always have a reason to be out walking around in the forest or country now, just in case you cross paths with an inquisitive game warden.

INDOORS

Hit hightimes.com and look through your collection of HIGH TIMES magazines to find the best grow information. Check out different cannabis forums on the Internet as well as videos posted on YouTube for all the current grow information.

Students head back to school this month after the long summer vacation. Autumn returns most of Middle America to its regular schedule. This means that it's time to crank up the garden lights if you've taken the summer off. Check the bulbs in your lamps for expiration dates and brilliance. Clean old bulbs and reflectors and replace any faint or outdated bulbs. Clean and disinfect any grow equipment that has been sitting idle.

Hot weather is still common outdoors in most of the Northern Hemisphere. But don't let the hot days fool you—nighttime temperatures are often much cooler, and the nights are also longer. Humidity increases quickly when the temperature drops. Counter humidity buildup by turning your lights on at night and off during the daytime. Good ventilation is still necessary as well: Keep the vent fan cranked up as needed and monitor humidity levels daily.

Pesky molds and insects, especially spider mites, can be a big problem this month. They'll be seeking shelter indoors to get out of the inhospitable weather outside. The warm, inviting growroom climate is just what they're looking for, so keeping your growroom clean is the best way to make pests and diseases stay outdoors, where they cause no harm to your garden. Make sure your plants are healthy and free of wounds so that diseases and pests don't have easy entry.

Nutrient and water consumption could change somewhat this month. When outdoor weather cools, plants tend to use less water and more fertilizer. Check the pH and EC (ppm) of the nutrient solution regularly to ensure that it stays in the proper proportions.

Double-check ballasts and fans for noise and excessive heat. Remove the protective shroud on circulation fans to lessen the air resistance and prolong the life of the fan motor. This will also help keep it from overheating, which in turns helps to avert fires! Also, the fan should have plastic blades.

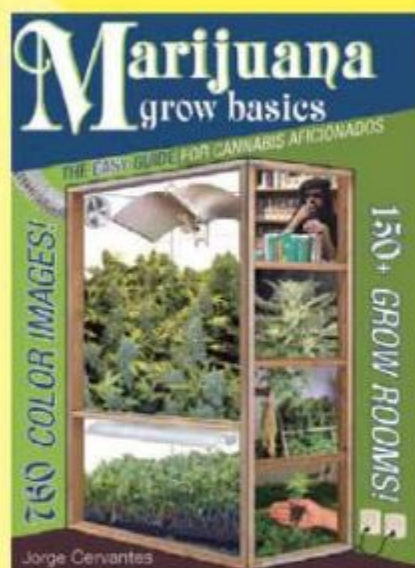

The ideal temperature for your growroom is 75°F during the day and 65°F to 70°F at night. Do your best to keep the room in this range to harvest heavy; plants suffer stress when the temperatures fluctuate much beyond this range. Check the temperature with a thermometer regularly, and keep the humidity at about 50%.

Take clones for your next crop. Grow clones for two to three weeks, at least until they have a strong, healthy root system.

Clean up your growroom and keep it that way! 🌿

NEXT MONTH IN HIGH TIMES

FREEBIE

THE STRAIN COLLECTOR

Some people collect stamps or baseball cards. Nice hobbies, but collecting seeds is better! This month, we cover the pot growers who acquire and cherish quality sensi strains in the form of mother plants, which allows them to flower out cuttings whenever they wish. Take a look inside one cultivator's collection of popular cannabis varieties from around the world.

CANNABIS CUP PREVIEW, PART I

Growers in Amsterdam are plotting their gardens and planning their entries for the 2009 Cannabis Cup. Cultivation editor Nico Escondido previews the pot that Cannabis Cup judges will be smoking this year. Plus: plenty of info that will get you amped for the 22nd annual event.

TOP 10 STONER DREAM JOBS

What if you could just take a puff, make a wish and have any pot-related job you wanted? Would you be a medical grower? Dealer to the stars? How about editor-in-chief of HIGH TIMES? Is your dream job high on our exclusive list? Bonus: Find out what it's really like to own and run a coffee-shop in Amsterdam. Bobby Black goes behind the scenes (and the counter) at Barney's and Amnesia.

TOP 20 ACTIVISM COLLEGES

It's our annual guide to higher education. We rank the top colleges and universities that have made significant contributions to marijuana activism. With a new era of reform lighting up America, these university students are an integral part of the battle to legalize it, once and for all!

YOUR BRAIN ON WEED

Jonah Lehrer is the author of the best-selling book How We Decide and arguably the world's first rock-star neuroscientist. Lehrer sits down with HIGH TIMES to discuss cannabis and the brain, including an enlightening discussion of his own personal marijuana use and an explanation of why getting stoned can help you make better decisions.

BONNAROO BOUND

Phish + Snoop = HIGH TIMES! Next month, experience the highlights from the summer's best festival, including the backstage sessions and late-night jams. Bonnarooooooooooo!!

PLUS: Hip-hop stoner phenomenon Kid Cuti; the first-ever THC Expo, a convention for cannabis industries and more!

POT LEAF POSTER

So you think you have heard every name out there for marijuana? Some are funny, some are creative and some are just out there—but what people don't know is that the United States government keeps an official list of all these names. We are proud to offer "The Marijuana Leaf," created using the official United States government list of the 647 "street terms" for marijuana. 24" x 30" poster. $13.99

For Official United States Government list of the 647 "Street Terms" for Marijuana.

NEW RELEASES

BOOKS OFFICIAL HIGH TIMES POT SMOKER'S HANDBOOK

NEW

Since 1974, High Times magazine has covered marijuana in all its aspects and wonders, from cultivation to legalization to the herb's enduring (and exalted) place in popular culture. Packed with inside information, The Official High Times Pot Smoker's Handbook rolls up all of this collected wisdom into one indispensable ganja guide. With a life-changing list of 420 things to do when you're stoned, this is truly, finally, the ultimate guide to green living. $19.95

VISC - "Breeding fine cognacs for the mind" - Since 1991
 Funding our schools and hospitals or used to reduce our debts. Legalize and tax Marijuana and the income generated can change our world. Grow and help the world grow too.

Acquisition of live cannabis seeds is illegal in the United States. Cannabis growers and consumers are one of the largest unrepresented blocks of voters in the world. This can change. We can end the persecution of innocent people, have more affordable Marijuana and a more peaceful world; if we stand our ground and demand it. Decriminalize Cannabis and instead of spending our tax dollars destroying lives, money could be spent
